Bill were not blackmailing Waiter Ward, but were trying to thwart blackmailers when Peters was killed.

In Cunningham's stories Charley Rogers and Bill Jackson were his cronles. It is believed that if they exist he knows where they are hiding, and it had been the intention of detectives to follow Cunningham's movements when he was released. His old haunts on Broadway will be watched, but it is improbable that he will be much in evidence for some time because his life has been threatened by blackmailers whom Cunningham implicated in his explanation of the killing of Peters by Ward.

Sheriff Werner's deputies, Fred Miller and Arthur J. Rykert, returned empty handed from Syracuse last night. They think that they missed Jack and Charley by only a few hours, and that the premature publication of the Syracuse clew by the newspapers prevented them from bagging their quarry.

A general alarm for Jack and Charley.

A general alarm for Jack and Charley was sent out last night to the Black Horse Troop of New York State's north border on the chance that the two missing witnesses to Peters's death would try to cross the line to Canada. The State police, the local police and sheriffs of the northern counties are watching roads leading north.

The search is made easier by the fact that both Ward and Cunningham agree that one of the pair is wounded in the arm. Cunningham said Jackson had a serious bullet wound and was weak from loss of blood a few hours after the shooting when Cuningham saw him in a car near his home in The Brunx. Ward's version was that he had exchanged shots with the two men after thilling Peters and that he thought he hit one of them, whereupoh they drove away in a big red Stutz touring car. Men with bullet wounds in their arms have been shadowed and one has been arrested since the shooting but not one tallied with the descriptions given of Jack and Charley.
